

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH NURSE SERVICES

Comprehensive programs and services for area employers

OSHA regulations, drug and alcohol testing, job safety issues, return to work and fitness for duty, and respirator clearance are just a few of the issues businesses face today.

Regulations and policies seem to be changing faster than many can keep up with.

What's a company to do ... especially if employee health and safety is just one of their many concerns?

Our Occupational Health Nurses Can Help

Many businesses do not employ a health and safety coordinator. Other employers, with a health and safety coordinator, often find they need assistance from an experienced health and safety professional. Our Occupational Health nurses have a wealth of private sector experience and can assist employers with a wide range of occupational issues. Our broad scope of services can be tailored to meet the specific needs of individual employers.

Services Available

While not all-inclusive, this list identifies many of the services our Occupational Health nurses offer area employers.

- On-site nursing services throughout our 19-county service area.

- Guidance in the application of federal regulations as they impact your workplace.
- Workers' compensation programs.
- Implementation and evaluation of health and safety policies/procedures.
- On-site first aid programs.
- Effectiveness assessments of personal protective equipment.
- On-site occupational health patient care services.
- Medical surveillance programs.
- Post exposure follow-up for occupational exposure to bloodborne pathogens.
- Medical certification for respirator use.
- Qualitative respirator fit testing.

All Businesses Can Benefit

Large and small businesses alike can benefit from the expertise of Gundersen's Occupational Health nurse services. Services can be contracted on an on-going basis or per specific project and tailored to meet the needs and budget of any business.
